Title Dear luncay (Junun aziz)

Author: Baradaran Siyyid, Ali Translator: N/A, N/A Illustrator: N/A, N/A

"Sometimes in life some events happen but we pass them by without taking notice. What I know is this : We don't have to do anything in order to live. The cosmos has an infinite number of extraordinary plans for our existence. So we don't need to bother ourselves about that. But that is not the whole story. Cosmos is also a terrific seducer. It feeds us and wants us to live without asking any questions. It doesn't even expect us to be grateful. But that is exactly what we have fallen for."---From the text of the book, reprinted on the back cover. This is a debut novel by the promising author, Ali Baradaran Seyyed. Highly recommended!

Littlehouse

(Khanih kuchak)

Author: Ulumi, Muhammad
Ali

Translator: N/A, N/A

Illustrator: N/A, N/A

Being excited by the new changes, Amir asked Ali and Manizheh with a bit of shyness: Is it possible that we have a small house? Undoubtedly for Amir, that little house would be an emotional shelter for his injured soul. That little house would undoubtedly feel like a castle if Manizheh was there with him. Recently freed of his addiction and with Manizheh, the earthy incarnation of Anahita, goddess of love and light, that house would be like an earthly paradise if and only if. ---From the text of the book, reprinted on the back cover. Title How soon I grew up (Chih zud buzurg shudam)

Author: Farhang far, Hasan Translator: N/A, N/A Illustrator: N/A, N/A

" It's twilight of dawn. Shall I make a fist like Sohrab and pound the wall so it makes a dent in it? No! Nothing calms me down anymore. If what Mitra says is right, I will certainly go back, then I will choose a life which is full of punishment and pain. Don't know, maybe it's all nonsense. Mitra says one shouldn't look too seriously at the affairs of this world; she says they are practices for hereafter. I was wise not listening to her. Right? I say, "What's with you Mitra?" As Ms. Marple says , " Have they drugged you up? Why do you keep talking about these fairy tales?" In the alleys or on the streets, anywhere that she sees a couple who are holding hands and walking , she stares at them for a long time." --From the text of the book. Reprinted on back cover.

Title 7 years and 9 months and 18 days (7 sal va 9 mah va 18 ruz)

Author: Suhrabi, Mihdi Translator: N/A, N/A Illustrator: N/A, N/A

"Here everything is grey, houses, cars and even humans. Each house has had a color before , but because of so much soot having fallen on the car that you have to really pay attention to learn what color it had been previously, when you look at the cars, it seems that their numbers are more than the numbers of people; the ever hurried people who have to be somewhere, a no man's land whose address they don't even know exactly". -- From the eponymic story of this short story collection

Title Haggle (Suda')

Author: Fazayili, Sudabih Translator: N/A, N/A Illustrator: N/A, N/A

"Everything is stretched and silence is piled up, your halves are silent and you slowly open your eyes and look at the new comer and at her shoes which she has taken off at the other corner of the room and at her feet and her hands, at this disproportionate sea which is beautiful. And suddenly a voice bursts, sound of her laughter like sound of breaking surf, " Oh you finally woke up?! I didn't wake you up. Did I?" You can never forget this laughter, this echo, this brushing against the walls, this rusty voice which comes form deep down and freezes you, which is from her within , from the bottom, the bottommost; you half sit up and look at her: "No, no, I woke up myself..." --From the text of the book. Scent of clematis

(Atr raziqi)

Author: Muvahhid Rad,
Farkhundih

Translator: N/A, N/A

Illustrator: N/A, N/A

I had a pain in my chest. How hard it is to practice forgetting but then even much more devastating when only and then only upon hearing even her name from another person's mouth to have all your efforts be reduced to nothing. How hard it is to yell I don't love you but to then really love her so much that it is your whole reason to be alive. How hard it is to be steadfast and resist against an emotion which pulls you irresistibly toward someone whom your brain says no to. I held my hands in front of my face, closed my eyes and whiningly whispered: "Leave me alone Sara, I am going mad, for god's sake!" ---From the text of the book, reprinted on the back cover.
