Title A date with fate (Qarar mulaqat ba sarnivisht)

Author: Nur Muhammadan, Translator: N/A, N/A Illustrator: N/A, N/A
Nasrin

" Had I thought more wisely and hadn't approached it selfishly and hadn't decided impatiently, had I not pushed easily into another woman's loving and caring embrace the man whom I loved and whom he loved me and the man who was the favorite of many women and still were, had I been a bit less pride , now I wouldn't feel so helpless and so paralyzed. Yes , I am guilty..." ---

Likeno one

(Misl hich kas)

Author: Shirdil, Simin

Translator: N/A, N/A

Illustrator: N/A, N/A

It was winter and the skies were moaning and about to cry. I was praying to god within me that it would not snow and it would not get colder than what it already was. Mom tightened her yellowed wool jacket around her and said "What a cold weather!" While my legs were shivering because of the cold, I said "Mom can we leave it for tomorrow?" "Not possible. Your dad doesn't even have a clean t-shirt to wear. You want him to come again at night and nag? Go get the hot water and pour it into the laundry wash tub". --- From the opening of the new novel by Simi Shirdil. She is a very popular author.

Some one is waving at taxis

(Yik nafar bara yi taksi ha dast takan mi dahad)

Author: Husiyni Khvah, Ali Asghar

Translator: N/A, N/A

Illustrator: N/A, N/A

"I did not want to look bad in front of Elham, otherwise, I would have never pushed the brake so hard to make that loud screech and my hand would not have slid from the steering wheel and hit the windshield wiper lever which turned it on with a horrible noise right at that moment. To be honest with you, I was too frightened. Well, I think I was right. Someone is standing by the road in the middle of the night and is waving at you. When you look carefully, you see it's the same person who waved at you when you were leaving. Isn't it a bit strange?" ---From the text of the book, reprinted on the back. This is a collection of short stories by Ali Asghar Hosseini Khvah, b. 1984.

Title Hello, yesterday (Salam, diruz)

Author: Zu al-Faqari, Faridih Translator: N/A, N/A Illustrator: N/A, N/A

"A breeze wraps me around itself. These days, I am cold, freezing; I reach you , I turn into a sigh, I melt. These days I am lost, have I changed or have teh situations? I enter a vallet where there is no room for hyperbole or impurity, where I have to be honest with myself even though my brain gets locked up in the slowly dying memories. Woe to this imperceptible selfishness which I have wrapped in the cloak of rationality and religion. The truth of life was a simple and clear secret that whoever polluted it were no longer the owner of anything, even thier own self." ---From the text of the book, reprinted in the backcover.
